The Biggest Night Yet of Republican Rejoicing and Merry Making.

Cloaks, Jackets and Dolmans Last night will be one of the brightest nemories of the memorable campaign of 1880. Memorable on account of two things, first because of the glorious victory Popular Low Prices. 3 and 4 Button Kid Gloves. opened apparently so auspiciously for the Democracy; in which so many meetings had been held; in which the sever remained square on top of the Regisidea was conceived of perpetuating the organization known as the "mourners," and of making it the nucleus of a Tamany in this city, which would fructify and multi-use the state of the potential political would be the potential political the potential political that the held in which they were that the held in which they were the trees that the held in which they were the potential political that the potential political that the potential political that the held in which they were the potential political that the ply until it would be the potential political DENTISTRY.—TO THOSE THAT DE power in West Virginia; and last of all they met in the same hall in which these same incipient Tammanyites had heard the knell of doom, and it was meet that in such a place and at such a time, the Re-publicans should repair to be glad. THE INTERIOR OF THE HALL.

The interior of the Washington Hall ever appeared to such an advantage as it decoration had been completed, even to the smallest particular. The stage was colors, recently presented to the several clubs in the city, formed a beautiful and tasteful background. The gas fixtures were decorated with small flags, and Chinese lanterns. On each side of the stage were handsome portraits of the President and Vice President elect, while a handsomely wreathed portrait of General Garfield depended from the center of the stage and under it the speakrs stood. Upon the walls around the entire length of the room were flags small and large in liberal numbers, while the gallery was literally covered with flags, and blazed with Chinese lanterns, and "Garfield, Arthur and Protection" in huge letters frowned down upon the place lately occupied by a gigantic portrait of the Superb.

THE 'COOKS. Two boxes on either end of the stage vere marked "That Same Old 'Coon," and each of them was the old 'coon, or rather upon each of them, for the 'coon sat up, watched the audience, and was happy, for had he not triumphed over the chief 'rooster' of the Democratic hen-

THE COLORED SINGERS. One of the most prominent and pleasing eatures of the occasion was the presence of a quartette of colored singers, led by or a quartette of the other members being Joe McCully, J. V. Hugh Sterling said that it was not necessary to ask how or why it was that this meeting had been called; it was sufficient for the audience to know that a sufficient for the audience to know that a prominent young Republican had originated the affair, arranged for its successful carrying out, and requested him (Sterling) to act as chairman.

I will now introduce to you the colored gentlemen, who will entertain you with some music. After the music Dr. Logan was introduced and spoke substantially as follows:

FELLOW CITENENS:—I was told to-day that this would be an experience meeting.

that this would be an experience meeting, and at it I would be expected to give my views. The most prominent thing in all views. The most promised thing in an this rejoicing to me is, the Republican party is not dead yet, not by a "329" sight. It has run the gauntlet of New York repeaters, South Carolina shot guns, English's 'bsr'l—the vest pocket edition—heathen Chinee forgery, and 229 chalked shows the range of the thermometer, as observed at Schnepi's drug store, Opera House corner,

I had occasion to say some time ago to five regame material sponged and cut to mowtheast winds, stationary and lower barometer and temperature.

In and occasion to say some time ago west to now the ast winds, stationary and that this was a grand party, that it had a grand history, and now it has just added another victory more illustrous than Apolical to north winds, stationary or lower temperature, or lower barometer.

It has said more than that. It has said this Nation must be cared for by its friends instead of its enemies. Aye more, it has said its industries must be protected by the proper legislation, and that legislation must be upon American ideas and not upon ideas suggested by foreigners.

We rejoice to night not because we have been victorious as a party, but because we are right, and have been right, and we now rejoice because we have been vindicated. I believe that not withstanding the forebodings of friends and the sneers of enumies, the Republican party has never swerved from the path of duty or of right. It has swept down that old dogma of States Rights. It has stood up for an hongest currency, and the rights of all, white or black. To the young men fe would say:

There is something in the Republican party that appeals to your honesty, to your reason, to your intelligence, and to everything of manhood that is in you, while there is nothing in It to be ashamed of. Under Gen. Garfield the country will be led on to a career of unexampled happiness and prosperity.

BUDGE COURAN ...

The room was comfortably filled, very few seats being left vacant, and there were many white stove-pipe hats with black crape bands visible. After smoking and chatting pleasantly together half an hour, President Wheeler ascended the bench and aslied for selfchatting pleasantly.

President Wheeler ascended the bench and called for order.

Major Alderson arose to inquire for the Constitution and By-laws; he wished to know if any article held the Club together beyond the date of the election.

Mr. Jeff. Davis, the colored member, was dispatched after the papers, and pending the arrival of these, a gentleman arose to inform the audience that none but Democrats were desired to remain; Republicans were requested to withdraw. As nobody went out, this did not appear to cover the ground entirely. A resolution was then adopted, amid cheers, to exclude all reporters.

of Buchanan.

The results of the recent victory were then demonstrated, the assurance of a safe administration, also the assurance of plenty of work, of a sound currency, &c.

The scenes and incidents at Washington Hall last Tuesday night when the returns were coming in were described with great effect by the speaker who was an eye witness of them.

said that he was a little staggered when did last night. Every arrangement for its first invited to attend a political meeting at Washington Hall this evening. He had the Democratic headquarters of the city. But then he recollected that there had been an election last Tuesday, and that that election had terminated the lease as that election had terminated the lease as well as all necessity on the part of the Democracy for a headquarters. He felt a little metancioly as he looked about on the stage and beheld the faded wreaths and played-out paraphernalia of the former occupants. They reminded him of the harp that once hung in Tara's Hall—that once the soul of music shed hall—that once the soil of music shed—but that afterwards hing so mute on Tara's walls as to make a famous Irish poet feel very disconsolate indeed. Here we were in the "banquet hall deserted" of the late Democracy, and here were their faded garlands as dead as their hopes of the future. Instead of an assembled Democracy in this place this evening, listening to the moving eloquence of those orators who had put themselves under contract to congratulate them on the results of the elections, here we were in full possession of their headquarters celebrating their defeat. It reminded him of the couplet about the man who dug the pit: about the man who dug the pit: "He digged is deep—he digged it for another; But he fell in and not his brother,"

"He dieged it deep—he digged it for another: But he fell is and ont his brother."

The effect of the elections on the Democracy had been wholesome already. He had noticed an improvement in one or two of their newspapers. They actually speak of Garfield with some slight degree of respect now. It reminded him of the anecdots about Napoleon, when he excaped from Eiba and returned to France. The Paris Monitear announced that the great anthropaphagist had escaped shortly afterwards it announced that the Corsican ogre had landed. Still later, that the monster had slept at Lyons; a few days after wards, that the tyrant was on his way to Paris; still later, that Bonaparte was advancing on the city, and finally on the memorable 21st of March it announced that His Imperial Majesty had entered the Tuiteries

Imperial Majesty had entered the Tuiterie in the midst of his faithful subjects Therefore, having in mind this historica incident, he had great hopes by the 4th o March next the Democratic papers would become accustomed to the employment of respectful language when referring to the next President. J. V. DRAPER said: I would have been scared, but as i

I must confess that I am glad, because in I must confess that I am glad, because in the rear, before and behind, I see the noble faces of a party that unshackled 4,000,000 of my race. I feel glad because I live in an age of light, science and liberty, on which the smiles of heaven beam with uncommon refulgency. Last Tuesday is over, the struggle of independence is over, civil war is over, and there but remains for us to do our whole duty and all will be well. THE LITTLE GIANT.

Col. Geo. B. Caldwell was next intro fuced and said: "We have not only got the temple of the heathen but we have got the heathen also. We will save them up and the next time we will corral them again. Not long ago these walls echoed to the footsteps of either Brutus I mean Johnny Pendleton or Ukridee Consentit that weeks the provide heathen Chines forgery, and $29 chalked by Onto and indiana, who told us that upon the pavements, and still it runs, and navigation was closed up, and now the comes up as lively, as healthy and as same boat that we took passage on is steam-riddy as an active boy from a swimming ing up the saline stream freighted with never come back." aame boat that we took passage on is steam-ing up the saline stream freighted with Democrats who will never come back." Mr. Tom Campbell then gave a good im-

The Ladies' and Misese' class meet every Wednesday and Saturday at same place, from 3 to 5 o'clock, r. m. Ladies and gentlemen can commence at any time, as new scholars are received almost every day. AMUSEMENTS.—The "Tile Club" it should AMUSEMENTS.—The "THE Clab" it should be remembered, will appear at the Opera House, Monday and Tuesday evenings. The Sunday Times says of it:

"At the Gaiety the troupe of merry-makers known as the "Tile Clab" have played to a succession of large and delighted audiences. They are far above the average of such parties in both general and average of such parties in both general and individual ability, and richly deserve their success. Their piece is in two acts, the second of which is, by the aid of Chinese lanterns and splendid stage effect, made very attractive. There are many features in the Tile Club that are artistic, both in these and arguments, and the antiences most every day.
